Big Data Summit Announces Event Details - Sessions Led by Representatives from Sprint and Citi

November 1, 2011 – The Big Data Summit team announced today session details for the upcoming technology event, November 8-10, 2011 in Miami, Florida.

The Big Data Summit is an opportunity for C-level executives with a focus on data storage, data management, and data analysis to gather and discuss how companies can effectively manage, protect and leverage the growing amounts of data in the enterprise. The Big Data Summit encourages attendees to make new business contacts, have in-depth conversations with C-level peers and learn about data management best practices through think tanks, panel discussions, analyst Q&As, and more.

On Wednesday, November 9th, Jared Benesh, GM, Sprint Nextel, will lead the CIO Think Tank, “Social Media is Right Here, Right Now...and It Has Big Data Implications!” Benesh will outline a case study on Sprint’s social media journey, as well as explain how to make data relevant to the organization. In addition, Benesh will discuss how to turn big data created by social media into real business by designing profitable tactics and how to successfully combine channel operation with big data.

Also taking place on Monday, November 9th, Nithin Johnson, Head of Analytics and Business Intelligence, Citi will lead the think tank, “Real-Time Data Analytics: Information NOW!” Johnson will discuss the advantages and limitations of real time data and take a look at new tools that can more efficiently process big data.
