Opportunity for Cloud Computing Experts to Speak at Upcoming Technology Event

November 22, 2010 – The CIO Cloud Summit announced today that it is looking for qualified speakers and cloud computing experts to present at the upcoming event, April 10-13, 2011. Qualified speakers include senior-level IT executives or individuals with executive level experience and a direct technology focus. All speakers must represent large organizations.

The CIO Cloud Summit brings together more than 50 CIOs, IT executives and technology thought leaders to network with their peers and discuss the latest cloud computing topics and trends. The event is an opportunity to connect with individuals who are planning, working on, or have completed cloud-computing projects for their organizations.

Agenda sessions at the CIO Cloud Summit are designed to encourage candid conversations. Attendees will have an opportunity to participate in think tanks, open forums, panel discussions and analyst Q&A sessions as well as attend thought-leadership presentations and keynote speeches. The event allows attendees to discuss critical cloud computing issues including public and private cloud computing, building private cloud infrastructures, cloud computing governance, compliance, cloud computing storage, barriers to adoption, and integration.

"It is no secret that cloud computing has quickly become a transformative technology within the enterprise; however, there are still many questions surrounding cloud computing technologies and deployment. The CIO Cloud Summit is a great opportunity for attendees to have their questions answered and to network with other executives who may be experiencing the same issues," said Glenn Willis, EVP, CIO Cloud Summit.

If you are interested in participating in the CIO Cloud Summit as a moderator, panelist or presenter, fill out the Call for Speakers form at www.ciocloudsummit.com/callforspeakers/. For more information about participating in the event, visit the event website, www.ciocloudsummit.com or contact Glenn Willis, EVP, CIO Cloud Summit at glenn.willis@cdmmedia.com or 808-694-3700.
